Some very elaborate and novel costumes were worn by the students and chief among them was the costume worn by Miss Pearl Hestmark. ## CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, April 19.—Corn prices took a decided upturn today, influenced by rapid absorption of wheat supplies and by the smallness of stocks of corn. Forecasts of unsettled weather tended also to stimulate bullish sentiment. Besides, week-end adjustment of trades was a handicap to the bears. Opening prices, which ranged from 3/4¢ off to 1/4¢ advance, with May $1.58 3/4 to 1.59 and July $1.52 to 1.53, were followed by a material advance.

Oats sympathized with the strength of corn. After opening a shade to 3/4¢ higher, with July 67 1/2 to 67 3/4¢, the market continued to ascend.

Provisions reflected the advances in grain. At first, however, the market was weak, owing to absence of support.

All corn deliveries reached the top-most prices yet this season. Closing quotations were nervous, 1 1/2 to 2 1/2¢ net higher, with May $1.61 and July $1.55 1/2 to 1.56 1/2.

Pork reacted somewhat at the last, but lard and ribs held firm.

VALLEY OF BAD SPIRITS, ONCE THE INDIANS' BOGEY, NOW THE TOURISTS' DELIGHT

The Start. Pooty Enroute to Nakimu. Deutschmann leading

Roadside of a Bear Hunt near Nakimu Caves

Cougar Trail on the Road to Nakimu Caves

Just a hole in the ground, or Na-ki-mu in Indian parlance, yet the object of mystery, fear, curiosity and interest. This in brief, describes one of the natural wonders of the Canadian Pacific Rockies. Mystery and fear marked the Indians' attitude, curiosity prompted the white man to investigate the hole, and interest brings many visitors annually to visit the Nakimu Caves.

Once upon a time—in 1904 to be exact—there came into the Selkirk Mountains near Glacier in British Columbia, a man who had hunted, prospected and explored the mountains from Colorado to the Arctic Circle. His name was Charles H. Deutschmann and in his association with the Indians he had heard many tales of a Valley of Bad Spirits, of Na-ki-mu in which these spirits lived and from whence issued their grumblings. He determined to solve the mystery. The Indians shunned the place. "Ha-lo Kla-wa-ta," meaning "no go," was their dogged answer when asked to accompany anyone into this, to them, fearsome place. So Deutschmann went alone.

He found the spirits to be whisperings made by shifting air currents in a narrow canyon; he found Na-ki-mu to be the entrance to a series of wonderful caves which he has been exploring and charting ever since. Today he acts as guide to the tourists who come from Glacier along the eight mile trail beside the dancing waters of Cougar Creek to visit these caves 5,500 feet above sea level.

The caves are formed of metamorphosed marbleized lime, the walls being covered with incrustations of calcium carbonate in pale yellow, pink, white and black. When the guide waves his torch back and forth pictures of indescribable beauty are revealed. The first cave is a sort of ante-chamber, being but eighty-seven feet underground; the second cave, 300 feet down, is an imposing vault 30 feet wide and 120 feet high. Cougar Creek, now of Stygian blackness, flows through the caves and adds to their weirdness. Huge icicles form a year round decoration. The air is fresh and cold and visitors need warm clothing. The caves may be visited from the middle of June to the last of September.

Botanists and naturalists find the Nakimu region a paradise and Deutschmann is a peerless guide for those who wish to stop over and hunt for blossoms, bugs or bears.
